

The Black Ship sails boldly through parallel universes governed by different, often disconcerting laws. So, if you like your poetry tame and predictable, stay clear! But if prospects of mind-bending, shape-shifting oddity laced with mordant humour intrigue you, then jump aboard this outlandish, artfully engineered vessel. Your sense of our own world's primal strangeness is sure to be enlarged.

David Clink combines in his newest work everything that makes his previous books distinctive; an off-kilter sense of humour that observes the mundane and gives it new life and importance; and the ability to make fictional worlds address the emotional truths of our daily lives.

—Robert Colman, author of Democratically Applied Machine

David Clink's book The Black Ship is nothing less than heroic! Emotions felt from these poems include everything from amazement over horrific images to wonder over the depth of love. If the future "is a reminder of what is still felt," then the reader needs to prepare to "feel" the journey of David Clink's words for a long, long time.

—Susan A. Manchester, author of To Stop Time

David Clink is the co-poetry editor (along with his sister Carolyn) of Amazing Stories Magazine. He's also the chair of the CSFFA (Canadian SF and Fantasy Association) Hall of Fame, which recognizes Canadian science fiction and fantasy practitioners for their contributions over their entire career. David's poem "A sea monster tells his story" won the 2013 Aurora Award for Best Poem/Song. This is David's fifth book-length collection of poetry. He fears the coming Robot Apocalypse.
